Landscape Architecture

It is now generally accepted that to have a successful treatment of one's grounds, large or small, an expert trained in garden planning and in the correct use of suitable plant material is as necessary to design the grounds as a skilled architect is to design the house.

We maintain a Department of Landscape Architecture to provide our clients with a thorough planning service which covers the designing of large estates, parks, schools and institutional grounds, as well as the small garden. The preparation in this combines scientific training in Europe and America with an intimate knowledge of English and European gardens, followed by years of actual experience in designing and detailed construction.

Supervision

Only too often one sees a garden where the gardener has become involved in the intricacies of flowers and their culture, losing sight of the garden scheme as a whole. Of recent years it has been realized more and more that a well-planned garden needs watchful supervision to retain the ideal picture. A supervisor, trained in the principles of good design and garden problems, may be obtained from Upton Gardens to direct your seasonal work.

Maintenance

Intelligent maintenance is the thing that gives the necessary finish to a well-planned garden. Pruning, spraying, cultivating, staking, dividing and edging in the proper way at the proper time, all go to make the difference between an attractive, well-kept garden and a neglected one. For discriminating people, we have a maintenance department with a manager who supervises a corps of trained men with proper equipment.
